FACULTY OF LANGUAGE

PROGRAMME OUTCOMES (POs)

Degree in Bachelor of Arts

A Bachelor of Arts in Languages is a degree program that focuses on the study of one or more foreign languages and often includes courses in linguistics, literature, culture, and related areas. The outcomes of a Bachelor of Arts in Languages program can be diverse and can lead to various career opportunities. Some of the potential outcomes of earning a Bachelor of Languages degree are:

PO1. Language Proficiency: Graduates often achieve a high level of proficiency in the languages they have studied, which can be valuable for both personal and professional communication.

PO2. Cultural Understanding: Along with language skills, students gain insights into the culture, history, and traditions of the countries where the languages are spoken. This cultural awareness can be beneficial in an increasingly globalized world.

PO3. Career Opportunities:

- Translation and Interpretation: Graduates can work as translators or interpreters, facilitating communication between people who speak different languages.
- Teaching: A Bachelor of Languages can be a stepping stone to a career in language teaching, either in schools or through private language instruction.
- Diplomacy and International Relations: Language skills are valuable in diplomacy, international relations, and working for government agencies or international organizations.
- Tourism and Hospitality: In regions where the language is spoken, knowledge of the language and culture can be a significant asset in the tourism and hospitality industry.
- Business: Companies often seek employees with language skills, particularly in international business, trade, and marketing.
- Publishing and Journalism: Language proficiency can lead to careers in writing, editing, or journalism with a focus on international affairs or foreign language publications.
- Nonprofits and NGOs: Many non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and nonprofits operate internationally and need staff with language skills to communicate effectively with local populations.
- Academia and Research: Some graduates may choose to pursue further studies and research in the field of linguistics, literature, or cultural studies.

PO4. Personal Enrichment: Learning languages and immersing oneself in different cultures can be personally enriching and broadening. It can provide a deeper understanding of the world and foster cross-cultural friendships and relationships.

PO5. Interdisciplinary Skills: The study of languages often involves interdisciplinary work, which can enhance critical thinking, problem-solving, and research skills.

PO6. Global Awareness: Graduates often develop a more comprehensive view of global issues and trends, making them better informed citizens and potentially contributing to social and political awareness.

PO7. Adaptability: Language graduates often develop adaptability and communication skills, which can be applied in various situations and careers.
