Key Points delivered in the lecture:

- Prof. T. B. Singh started off by highlighting the ethical issues that are always present in research and how they affect the reliability and validity of study findings. The topic of discussion included ethical standards, tenets, and researchers' obligations to the public and their subjects.
- The need of rigor in research methods was discussed in detail throughout the lecture, with topics including careful analysis, organized data collecting, and strong study designs covered. Prof. T. B. Singh gave advice on how to steer clear of typical traps that can weaken the validity of study.
- The importance of originality in research was one of the lecture's main themes. Prof. Singh encouraged participants to look beyond traditional methodologies and embrace cutting-edge strategies to meet current research difficulties by examining creative ways to research design, data gathering, and analysis.
- In a research setting, the speaker stressed the connections between ethics, rigor, and innovation. He demonstrated how a holistic approach that integrates these three components produces more reliable and significant research outputs using case studies and examples.
- An interactive question-and-answer period allowed attendees to interact with Prof. Singh directly and ask questions about themes as the presentation came to an end. The conversation improved knowledge of the comprehensive approach to research technique.

Conclusion:

Workshop on "Ethics, Rigor, and Innovation: A Holistic Approach to Research Methodology" offered a thorough and motivational examination of important factors to consider when conducting research. After attending, attendees had a better grasp of the ethical duties that fall on researchers, the value of rigor, and how innovation may spur significant advances in research. In conclusion, by encouraging a comprehensive viewpoint on research technique and giving participants the skills and drive to perform research that is not just methodologically sound but also ethically sound and creative, the event effectively reached its goals.
